My heritage
my word
my breath
my body

Every culture signifies the body in a different way. Language helps us to build bridges between people. This intercultural performance builds a bridge to help us better understand the concepts of body and word in nahuatl cosmology.

Nahuatl students from Warsaw University's Faculty of "Artes Liberales" will use their bodies to read Tocompah itlahtol, a story written by Eduardo de la Cruz about a man who reflects on his own death. Hills, birds and spirits, the same as humans, need eat and drink. Our mother earth will eat our bodies and drink our blood.

Participants of this perceptual event will explore their own mental images.
